

Zhang Zhuguo is a senior certification engineer working for Shanghai Aircraft Airworthiness Certification Center (SAACC) of CAAC since 2008.

His responsibilities include conducting revision of CCAR-25 regulation and procedures related to the aspect of airframe and cabin safety, and type certification of Chinese domestic transport airplanes and type validation of international transport airplanes.

He participated in the type certification of ARJ21-700 airplanes, and now is conducting certification of C919 airplane and amphibious TA600 airplane. He is also involved in the type validation of several airplanes from Boeing, Bombardier, Embraer, and Gulfstream.